Preface

The following Index to THE CLASSICAL WEEKLY, Volumes I-XVI, is presented in the conviction that it will, in some measure, meet a definite want. The existence of such a want is evidenced by the many inquiries that come to the editorial desk, from persons who wish to know where they can find material on the teaching of this or that subject within the field of the Classics, or arguments with which to fortify themselves against assailants of the Classics, or strengthen their own faith in the value of the Classics. With the aid of this Index any one can, henceforth, answer such questions for himself, so far as an answer is discoverable in the pages of THE CLASSICAL WEEKLY.

To be of real value an Index should be as detailed as possible. The same item must be listed under various heads, since different investigators will think of a topic in different ways; allowance must be made, too, for imperfect recollection of titles once seen or heard. In the matter of classification and repeated entry of items the present Index goes as far as the funds available for its publication made possible.

The basis of the Index lies, of course, in the separate Indexes with which the several volumes close. But these have been very greatly expanded, in part by the entry of items under additional heads, but in far greater part by the addition of new material. To secure the new material the volumes have been examined afresh page by page. After all this care, some items have, doubtless, escaped attention. For such shortcomings indulgence will be granted by all who have even the slightest conception of the difficulty and the laboriousness of the task involved in the compilation of this Index.

The plan is the simplest conceivable—the arrangement of all the material under a single alphabetical sequence. In the alphabetization the introductory A, An, or The of a title has been disregarded. Since it seemed simplest, and so best, to group under a contributor's name all that he had published in THE CLASSICAL WEEKLY, the caption Editorials will not be found in the present Index. Finally, each item has been made per se intelligible and significant.

For the inclusion and grouping of material I am myself alone responsible. For assistance in the preparation of copy, verification of references, help in the reading of proofs, etc., I am very deeply indebted to my Secretary, Miss Grace E. Kemper, who by her labors here has added immensely to her devoted services, of many years' duration, to The Classical Association of the Atlantic States, and has thereby laid the Association under a still deeper debt to her. Much help was derived in the preparation of copy from two Assistant Secretaries, Miss Pauline Crouse, of New York City, and Miss Florence Kemper, of Caldwell, New Jersey, who worked faithfully on this task for many weeks during the summer of 1923.
